H

H, h, is the eighth letter of the Latin alphabet, and the guttural aspirate. It was doubted among the ancients whether H was properly a letter or not. H enters into combination with all the vowels, and generally precedes them; but it was frequently not pronounced: hence harena for arena, hauriendo for arundo, and even hoc for ac; and on the other hand, aruspex for haruspex, erus for herus, ericio and erctum for hericio and herctum, atheneus and aeneus, Amnibal and Hannibal, Adria and Hadria, etc. || Interchanges of H with other letters. 1. In combination with s it forms s: e. g. traho, trahi; trahi-si; veho, vehi-si. || III. The Romance languages display the same uncertainty in the use of H as is manifest in the parent tongue, sometimes retaining it, but far more frequently omitting it: e. g. Lat. hali-traxi, hara, harpago; Fr. haleter, havas, harpon: Lat. habere; It. avere, Fr. avoir: Lat. hordeum; Fr. orge; Lat.

I.

I, i, the ninth letter of the Latin alphabet, and the third vowel; but in the natural series it stands first, representing the least emphatic of the pure vocables. Hence there is a great tendency to substitute it for the other vowels; and it is very much employed in the inflection and derivation of words, both as a mere connecting vowel and as an euphonic representative of the other vowels. || Interchanges of i with the other vowels. 1. For those with a and e vide those letters. 2. With o: this occurs chiefly in derived words: e. g. multo, multi-tudo; alto, alti-sonus: there are a few instances in compounds: e. g. from notus come agnitus, cognitus; from loco, illico: so the orig. forms ollus, ollic, became ille, illic. 3. With u: in derived words: e. g. arcu, arcu-tenens; aestu-, aesti-fer; famul-, familia. Many words which orig. were spelt with u subsequently had i: e. g. all superlatives, as maximus for maximius; lacrima, lacrima. In inflection the dat. and abl. plu. of the 4th decl. orig. had u, as fructubus; but afterwards gen. i, fructibus. 4. On the connection of i with j and y, vide those letters. || Changes of i in the Romance languages: 1. i long generally remains unchanged, but it is sometimes changed into e and o: e. g. Lat. frigidus; It. freddo; Fr. froid.

2. i short is generally changed into e, except in French: e. g. Lat. bibere; It. bevere. In French the usual change is into o: e. g. Lat. bibere, digitus, fides, minus, niger; Fr. boire, doigt, foi, moins, noir. 3. i long by position is subject to nearly the same changes as i short, being usually changed into e: e. g. Lat. virga; It. Sp. and Port. verga; Fr. verge. But i followed by ng generally becomes ei, and sometimes ai and a in French: e. g. Lat. pingere, diagnari, lingua; Fr. peindre, diagner, langue. Both i short and i long by position frequently remain unchanged.

IV. As an abbreviation the vowel i denotes in, infra, ipse, isia, etc. IIQ. Iidemque, IMP. imperium, imperator, etc. As a numeral, I = i (unus and primus).

immixtus (imm.), a, um, Part. [immixto]. immo (imo), adv. (usu. placed at the beginning of a sentence, but sometimes after one or two words), used in answers: 1. to introduce a contradiction of the question or preceding statement: hence, after positive sentences, to be rendered by, no indeed, by no means; after sentences containing or implying a negative, by, yes indeed, by all means; or in gen. by, on the contrary (often strengthened by edepol, hercle, vero, potius, etc., and frequently elliptical): Ter. Etiam fatetur de hospite? Th. Immo perneget, Pl.: non igitur faciat, dixerit quis, quod utile sit, quod expedit? Immo intelligat nihil nec expedire nec utile esse, quod sit injustum, yes, let him do what is advantageous and expedient, but let him understand, etc., Cic.: quid tu? Nulane habes vitia? Immo alia et fortasse minora, yes, I have faults, but they are of a different kind, and perhaps of less consequence, Hor.: Cilicet jam me hoc vales patrem exorare ut celet senem vestrum. Sy. Immo, ut recta via rem narret ordine omnem, nay, just the contrary, Ter. 2. to retort a question: Me. Quid apud hasce aedes negotii est tibi? So. Immo quid tibi? nay, rather, Pl. 3. After questions implying doubt or uncertainty to introduce an emphatic affirmation contradictory of the doubt: not only... but even: Ca. Equidnam meminit Mnesticus? Pis. Rogas? Immo unice unum plurimum pendit, she not only remembers him, but, etc., id. So also where a speaker corrects and amplifies a preceding assertion: senatus haec intelligit, consul videt, hic tamen vivit. Vivit? Immo vero etiam in senatu venit, lives (did I say)? he not only lives, but, etc., Cic. And similarly in the middle of a sentence, for the more class. vel potius: nay rather, nay, I should rather say: simulacrum deum, deos immo ipso convulsos ex sedibus suis ablatores, Liv.

II. In some instances it seems to contain no idea of contrariety, but to convey a direct confirmation of what precedes, so that it may be rendered by yes, yes truly, so be it: though in the opinion of the best critics it will always be found, on a close examination, to have more or less of an adversative meaning: Immo ita sit, Cephalus, crescat tua civibus opto res, alii may it be so (for it is not now), Ov. J.

J, represents a sound respecting which grammarians have maintained widely different opinions. There is no doubt, however, that it was originally represented by the same symbol as the vowel i: and hence some writers hold that j formed no part of the Latin alphabet, but even they admit that it represented two distinct sounds. That J was a consonant is proved by the fact that when a word ending in a single consonant is followed by one beginning with j, the last syllable of the preceding word is always long by position. As to its sound, the most probable opinion is that it closely resembled the German j or English y (before a vowel). But in England the Latin j is usually pronounced like the same letter in English. The ancient grammarians state that j between two vowels was pronounced double; and hence some authors (as Cicero) repeated it in writing, (e. g. ajo (ajo), Majja (Maia), pejjus (pejus), etc. J occurs only at the beginning of syllables, and is invariably followed by a vowel. 11. Changes of J in Latin.

1. The closest relation exists between j and the vowel i; hence, in the formation and inflection of words, it was very often changed into the latter: e. g. Pompejus, Pompel; Gajus, Gai; jam, etiam, quoniam; ajo, albam. On the other hand, it was often changed by the poets into j for metrical purposes. e. g. ajete, abietibus, for abiete, abietibus.

2. J is more nearly allied to the gutturals than to any other class of consonants; hence it is sometimes interchanged with g: e. g. from the root mag- (in magnus, magis) comes major.

3. In the compounds of jacio j is sometimes elided, especially in the poets: e. g. abicet, adicet, obicet, for abicet, adicet, obicet. 4. On the change of d into j, vide letter D, no. 1. 2. 111. Changes of J in the Romance languages.

1. into j, gi, or gg: e. g. Lat. Januarius, jam, majus, prius; It. gennaio, già, maggio, peggio (on the gg, v. supra no. 1). 2. into i: e. g.: Lat. major, bajulare; Fr. maire, bailleur. 3. into y: e. g. Lat. jam, major; Sp. ya, mayor. 4. into z: e. g. Lat. juniperus; Sp. sinabro.

5. into i: e. g. Lat. Julius; Sp. luglio. 6. Omission of j: e. g. Lat. adjutare; It. aiutare; Fr. aider; Lat. j-junare; Fr. dé-j-ner.

IV. As an abbreviation J. O. M. signifies Jovis Optimo Maximo; J. R. Juno Regina; J. V. T. Victoria Triginta.

K

K, k, a guttural corresponding to the Gr. κ, which was employed in the earliest period of the Latin language, when C represented the sound of G. When subsequently a distinct symbol was introduced for the latter, C was made the representative of the sound of K, which character thus became superfluous, and fell into disuse, being retained only in certain abbreviations, as K. for Caeso, K. or Kal. for Calendae. In inscriptions K.A. stands for capitalis, K.K. for castrorum, K.S. for carus suis.

koppa, n. indecl. = κωππα, the obsolete Greek letter: Quint.

L, l, indecl. n. or (subaud. litera) 1. f. the twelfth letter of the Latin alphabet, the form of which is identical with the Greek Λ, but changed in position. || Interchanges of L with other letters. 1. With D: e. letter D, no. 1. 4. 2. With N: e. g. vīnū, lympha; λίτρον, nitrum. 3. With R: e. g. leipov, liliū; Ραρία, Ραλία: so the suffixes ali and ari are merely variations of each other. 4. In the composition and derivation of words, L exercises an assimilating power over other consonants brought into contact or proximity with it: e. g. aligro for adligo; colligo for colligo; similarly by contraction and assimilation are formed libellus from liber; ullus from unus; labellum from labrum.

III. Changes of L in the Romance languages. 1. into t: e. g. Lat. plus, flos, glacies; It. più, fiore, ghiaccio. 2. into r: e. g. Lat. lucinoli; It. rosignuolo; Sp. ruiseñor; Port. rosinol; Prov. rosinhol; Fr. rosignol. 3. into n: e. g. Lat. lutra, Sp. nutria; Lat. libella, Fr. nizeau. 4. into d: e. g. Lat. amyllum, It. amido, Sp. Port., Fr. amidon. 5. into ll, pl, ch, th, or g: e. g. Lat. pilare, Fr. piller; Lat. legare, Port. chegar; Lat. camelus, Sp. camello; Lat. pilare, It. pigliare; Lat. liliū, It. giglio. 6. ll undergoes the same changes as those of the single consonant explained in no. 5: in French, however, ll is seldom changed. 7. When ll of the Latin word terminates the derived word, one l is usually omitted: e. g. Lat. caballus, Fr. cheval; Lat. calis, capillus, aucella, colum, old Fr. cal, chervil, oisel, col; mod. Fr. cheveu, oiseau, cou. 8. The change of l into u, seen in the examples last given, often occurs in other combinations: e. g. Lat. talpa, abuss, delphinus, altus, alter, dulcis; Fr. taupe, aube, dauphin, haut, autre, doux. 9. l is omitted (i) at the beginning of words (rare): e. g. Lat. lynx, Fr. once. (II) between two vowels (rare, except in Port. in which it is very frequent): e. g. Lat. aquila, candela, idem, mulier, mola; Port. aquia, comde, v. j. molyer, mola. IV. As an abbreviation L. usu. denotes the praenomen Lucius, though it also stands for libens and locum.

2. As a numeral L. stands for 50.

M.

M, m, the thirteenth letter of the Latin alphabet, resembling in form and sound the Greek M; it belongs to the class of liquids or semivowels, and is closely connected with the labial notes. The Latin language, unlike the Greek, tolerated a final m: but its sound was faint, and before an initial vowel, even in prose, was scarcely heard. Hence arose the rule of versification respecting the elision of final syllables terminating in m. To this also are owing the forms attinge, dice, ostende, facie, recipe, for attingam, dicam, ostendam, faciam, recipiam; and the forms doneo for donicum, coëo, coëreo, for con-eo, con-erco, etc. Initial m cannot be followed by n, as in Greek; hence μῆν became μήνα in Latin.

II. Interchange of m with other letters: 1. With n: e. g. candem for cundem; quorundam for quorundam; imbellis for imbellis; imprimis for imprimis; immanis for immanis, etc. So the Latin termination m generally corresponds to the Greek final ν, in the inflections both of nouns and verbs. 2. With b: e. g. hiems and hibernus; tumeo and tuber; glomus and globus. 3. With v: e. g. promulgis is prob. another form of promulgo.

III. The only change of M in the Romance languages is into n: e. g. Lat. maepulum, It. napolo, Sp. napera, Fr. naple. So with the omission of a vowel: e. g. Lat. semia, Sp. senda, Fr. senier. So when followed by n: e. g. Lat. autumnus, columna; It. autunno, colonna; Fr. colonne. 2. Omission of n before n: e. g. Lat. domina, sonnus; Sp. doña, sonno; Port. domo, sono. IV. As an abbreviation, M usu. denotes the praenomen Marcus, and less freq. noster, monumentum, municipium; M' denotes the praenomen Manius; 2. As a numeral, M, standing for CIO, denotes the number 1000.

N.

N, n, the fourteenth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding in form and sound to the Greek Ν. It is one of the liquids or semi-vowels, and is closely allied with the dental mutes. There appears to have been a general tendency in Latin to get rid of the sound of n before s; hence we find frus for frons; mensis for mensis, etc. This occurs also, but less frequently, before other consonants: e. g. laterna for lanterna; lingula for lingula. So, too, at the end of words, where, indeed, it is very rare; alioquin for alioquin; ceteroquin for ceteroquin, etc. On the other hand, n is sometimes (as in Greek) inserted before the final gutturals of roots, to make a strengthened form from which the imperfect tenses are derived: e. g. leg-n-g-, "touch"; liqu-n-g-, "leave".

|| Interchanges of n with other letters. These are almost wholly confined to its assimilation with, or change into, the other liquids. 1. For its changes with l and m, vide those letters.

2. Before r it is assimilated: e. g. tr-rumpo, cor-rumpo. || III. Changes of n in the Romance languages. These, for the most part, are similar to those which occur in Latin itself. 1.

Initial n undergoes no change. 2. Medial n is changed (i) into l: e. g. Lat. cernensum, It. celeno. (ii) It is omitted, often with some modification of the accompanying vowels: e. g. Lat. diurnum, German. Aibernum, infernum: Fr. jour, four, hiver, enfer. This takes place especially when n is followed by s: e. g. Lat. constare, It. costare, Fr. coûter: Lat. mensis, It. Sp. Port. mesa, Fr. mois. (iii) nn becomes gn, ñ, or ny: e. g. Lat. grunnire, It. grunnire, Fr. grugner, Sp. grunnir, Port. grunnir.

IV. As an abbreviation, N usually stands for natus, nefastus dies, nepos, etc. N = nations, natus, nostri, nostro, etc., numerus, numero, etc. *N. (ii) navem perforare, qua ipse quis naviget, to do an injury to oneself, Cic. 2. Navis Argolica, or simply Navis, the constellation Argo: id. || Fig.: una navis est jam bonorum omnium, id. [Cf. Sans. nau; Gr. navis; Anglo-Sax. naea, etc.]

navita, ae, m. [navis] a sailor, seaman, mariner: vela dabat ventis, nec adhuc bene noverat illis navita, Ov. (v. navita.)

navus (gnavus), a, um, adj. active, diligent, assiduous: homo navus et industrius, Cic. [The orig. form was gnavus; cf. i-gnavus; prob. from root gna or gen (nascor, gigno), like the Gr. γενναος (others derive it from root ano, "to know.")

ne (old forms nei and ni), adv. and conj. the primitive Latin negative particle, the Eng. no; whereas non is a derivative (v. non, ad ini); cf. Anglo-Sax. na and ne (Eng. no), whence naht (Eng. not) is derived. || The absolutely negative and purely adverbial nature of ne is exhibited in the early stage of the language, in the negation of a single word: ne minores (verres) quam semestres, Varr. 2. This adverbial use was retained at later periods, (1) in connection with quidem, to negative emphatically the word placed between them, not even: ne in oppidis quidem; ne in fanis quidem, Cic. (ii) In composition it, as an absolute negation, as in neque, nequiquam; necio, nevol; nefas, nepus (for non purus), nequeo; nemo, nilhil, nullus, nunquam, etc.; and with a paragogic c before: necopinans and negligio; negotium (i. e. ne-lego; nec-otium). || But the proper use of ne, in contradistinction to non, esp. in the more developed stages of the language (though this use is also found in the earlier stages), is to negative a proposition, not absolutely and as a matter of fact (objectively) like non, but relatively or as matter of opinion, desire, etc. (subjectively). Thus ne answers to the Gr. μή, and non to οὐ. Hence it is used, 1. With the imperative in prohibitions: ne, pueri, ne tanta animis assuesce bella, Virg. So in prohibitions expressed by the subj.: ne aut suus

pro, prep. with ab: Of place: before, in front of: sedens pro aede Castoris, Cic. With verbs of motion: Caesar pro castris suas copias produxit, before the camp, Caes. 2. from the front of, on the front of any thing, in: haec pro suggestu pronuntiata, from the front of the tribune, id. ||, Transf. in moral and abstract relations (from the idea of standing in front of, for defence or protection) for, in favour of, for the benefit of (opp. to contra): dulces et decorum est pro patria mori, Hor. 2. in the place of, instead of, for: ego pro te molam, Ter. Esp. with the title of any officer, to denote his substitute: pro consule, pro praetore, pro quaestore, pro magistro, etc. (and later in one word, as proconsul, proprætor, etc.), proconsul, praetor, proquaestor, vice-director: Cic. Hence pro may be rendered (ii) for, the same as, just as, as: bene educui parvulo, habui, mavi pro meo, as my own, Ter.: pro certo ponere, to state as a fact, Caes. (iii) Esp. pro eo, for the same thing as, just the same: Cic. So with particles of comparison, atque (ac), ac si, quasi, just the same as, even as, as though: pro eo ac si concessum sit, id. And with quod, for the reason that, because: pro eo quod pluribus verbis vos quoniam volui fatigavi, Liv. (iv) to denote remuneration, (i. e. what is given in place of something else): for, on account of: minims, qui pro vectura, solveret, Cic. 3. Implying comparison or proportion: in proportion, in comparison with, according to or as, conformably to, by virtue of, for, etc.: prolium atrocium quam pro numero pugnantium fuit, Liv.: pro virili parte, according to one's ability, Cic.: pro rata parte and pro rata, in proportion, proportionably; v. ratus: pro tempore et pro re, according to time and circumstances, Caes. So pro eo, foli, by quantum or ut, in proportion to, as, according to, according as: eaque pro eo, quantum in quoque sit ponderis, esse aestimanda, Cic. Under this head may be placed the adverbial use of pro in the phrases pro quam, pro ut (for the latter, always found as a monosyll., v. prout): in proportion as, just as: ut sic est pro quam largos exaequat aestus, Lucr.

and before vowels sometimes prōd signifies 1. in front, forwards, forth: e. g. pro-cedo. Hence it denotes (i) prolongation; e. g. pro-duco. (ii) remoteness = afar off: e. g. pro-apico. (iv) With words denoting falling, throwing, lying, etc. forwards, at full length, down: e. g. pro-cido, pro-jicio, pro-cumbo, pro-clivis. 2. before, previously: e. g. pro-videre. Hence before nouns denoting relationship = great: e. g. pro-avus: prop. this denoted ancestors; but the correlative terms naturally took the same form: e. g. pro-nepos. 3. for, in defence of, for the benefit of: e. g. pro-pugno, pro-sum. 4. for, instead of: e. g. pro-curo, pro-consul. [Pro and Præ are the same word: cf. Sans. pra; Gr. πρό; Eng. prefix for and fore. The r in pro is sometimes transposed in composition: hence pro-rigo and pol-licor, q. v.: in posi-morium, an old form of po-morium (q. v.), s represents r in pro.] (Hence it per; Fr. pour.)

R.

R, indecl. n. or (on account of li-tera) f. the eighteenth letter of the Latin alphabet, and one of the liquids.
 II Interchanges of R with other

1. With s. In many words, r medial and final (but not initial) is a euphonic substitution for the original sound of s: e. g. asa, lasea, plusma, mellosem, foedesum, Fusius, Papialis, Valesius, fusvos, janitos, became ara, lares, plurima, meliorem, foederum, Furius, Pa-

pirius, Valerius, furvus, janitor; so too, dirimo is formed from dis-emo. Both sounds have maintained their place in some substantives ending in or or es: e. g. arbor, arboris; color, coloris; labor, bonos; labor, labos; lepor, lepus: so in quæso, quæsumus, also written quæro, quærimus; in nasus also naris, pulvis also pulver, etc. 2. For the interchanges of r with d, l, s, v, side those letters. 3. r is elided in pervio, for pervuro; in crebreco, rubresco, for crebresco, rubesco, etc. 4. r sometimes exchanges its place with the adjoining vowel: e. g. from the roots ter, cer, ster, come the perfects trivi, cresci, stravi; and the perf. part. trivius, crescit, stratus. III. Changes of r in the Romance languages. 1. Into i: This is the most freq. change: e. g. Lat. arbor, aridus, Tibur; It. albero, alido, Nicoli. 2. Into n: e. g. Lat. Suri, It. Sinno. 3. Into d: e. g. Lat. ermarius, prova, quaterne, radix; It. armadio, pruva, chiederre, vado. 4. Into s: Lat. dorsum, It. dorso. 5. In connection with h: e. g. Lat. sistrum, It. strapo: Lat. frangere, Fr. fremper. 6. r medial or final is sometimes omitted: e. g. Lat. ara, aratrum; It. aia, arato. IV. as an abbreviation, R. signifies Romanus also Rufus, recte, rectitudine, regnum, ripa, et mult. al.; R. P. respublica; R. R. rationes relatæ.
